Alachua County Overview

Although Alachua County is home to the University of Florida and UF Shands Hospital & Academic Medical Center, many community members experience limited transportation, access to food, health care, jobs and social services. In 1987, the Harvard Hunger Study ranked Alachua County as #97 of 150 “hunger counties” in the nation. This situation has changed little over the last 30 years and AC was described by the 2016 Community Health Needs Assessment as a place with “marginalized communities with dire health needs, a lack of access to care and [where] health care and prevention are not priorities.”

Despite long-standing health disparities, Alachua County residents are fortunate to have a robust health care safety net that provides medical, oral health, behavioral health, education, advocacy and psychosocial services to low-income, uninsured and underinsured residents. The National Academy of Medicine (2000) defines the health care safety net as “those providers that organize and deliver a significant level of health care and other related services to uninsured, Medicaid, and other vulnerable populations.” They “are distinguished by their commitment to provide access to care for people with limited or no access to health care due to their financial circumstances, insurance status, or health condition” (Nat’l Assoc. Public Hospitals & Health Systems, 2005). A list of ACSNC members is available, visit <https://com-acrcp.sites.medinfo.ufl.edu/files/2015/04/Safety-Net-descriptions-04202015.pdf>.

Annually, the information in this Guide is updated to provide current information about community programs and services. The goal is to help safety net clinics and county organizations connect residents to the services needed to improve health and well-being.

Use information from the sites below to increase access to care and utilization of services:

1. The National Council on Aging (NCOA) helps older adults save money or qualify for programs that offer financial assistance with health care, prescription medications, food and utilities. It enables access to tax relief, transportation, legal services and/or employment at <https://www.benefitscheckup.org>.

6. The FL Department of Elder Affairs (DOEA) maintains a Resource Directory for all 67 counties. Access information about programs and services in your local community at http://elderaffairs.state.fl.us/doea/resource_county.php.
7. Discover resources that strengthen families [food, housing, transportation, health and more] at <https://pfsf.auntbertha.com/>.

When referring residents to programs and services, remember that participation often requires completion of an application; one in five adults (20%) in the U.S. and Florida reads at or below the 5th grade level.¹ Adults who do not read well will not self-identify due to shame and health professionals rarely consider the literacy skills of patients in the referral process. Low literacy adults will need help to complete applications at all and/or complete them correctly. Health professionals often label patients as “non-adherent” when they fail to follow medical advice; we do not realize that non-adherence is often related to low literacy skills, poor health literacy and/or different explanatory models of illness. You can identify low literacy adults by watching for these behavioral cues:^{2, 3}

- Incomplete or inaccurately completed forms
- Do not take notes when receiving new information
- Do not fill out forms in your presence and use excuses such as, “I forgot my glasses,” or “someone is waiting for me so I need to fill this form out later”
- Do not follow medication, exercise, diet or other prescribed regimens
- Failure to show for appointments, tests or procedures
- Use humor or clowning around as distractions when asked about health or health behaviors
- Have difficulty explaining health concerns, symptoms, conditions
- Quiet, passive, do not ask questions
- Change in body posture from relaxed to more rigid in your presence
- Limited eye contact and increased blushing and/or fidgeting
